GAHIGI ADVENTURE

The Pharaoh's builders have just finished building his sparkly, shiny boat. Most of all I like the shooting stars. Aren't they breathtaking? By urgent request of the Pharaoh: I have been painted too. There beneath the new boat that's me Gahigi and this is the story of how I became royal. Every day I wake up and go to the river Nile and hunt for fresh, wet fish and when the sun is scorching I find a unmeasurable, shadowy rock to lie on and I enjoy the breeze.

One afternoon was different for when I wake up I saw a young man in a lovely red and white robe of a prince. He stopped, bent down and stroked me on the head. I was not afraid - petrified. A friendship filled me. So he said softly "I feel a crocodile in my hands for your name means 'hunter' we shall meet again."

I saw the prince and he said "Sahh So we meet again G-haigi" the soldiers said go through the right path then the prince refused and the guards ran away and the prince said "I will follow you" and I led the prince out.

After the amazing adventure, the prince got and I encountered on our journey back to the temple and the prince got his builders to build a new home for me. "This is where you and I belong," he whispered now the stars of Egypt light up the night and I lie beneath them. I feel as brave as a great warrior. My tale is told. A tale that shows how a courageous crocodile can play its part in the life of a royal prince.
